Commentary

The outbreak of open hostilities between Iran and Israel, with support from the US, was the most noteworthy event of the month but had little impact on financial markets apart from creating volatility in oil prices. While the WTI crude spot price ended June almost 9% higher than it started, an interim spike of 23% was largely reversed after US actions resulted in a pullback from the brink. Global stock and bond markets have tended to not be unsettled by geopolitics in the Middle East in recent years, and that was the case again as despite the worrying developments equities and fixed income assets generally rose in value in a strong month.

The MSCI World index added +2.3% in GBP terms, with emerging markets outperforming this and Europe weaker after a strong run so far in 2025. The best performers during the month were US- or technology-orientated strategies such as Edgewood (+3.4%) and Sanlam Global AI (+4.7%), and those with Asian exposure such as Aubrey (+3.5%) and Polar EM Stars (+4.5%). The ongoing weakness of the US dollar is having a significant impact, with US equities performing well in June but returns being deflated by the movement in the currency. This relates to several factors, most related to uncertainty from international investors on the paths that the Trump administration may take on any number of matters – tariffs, the fiscal deficit and relations with the Federal Reserve, to name just three.

The looming 9th July deadline Trump’s 90-day window to agree new tariff levels seems unlikely to yield much progress on trade deals, so a further postponement may occur. Focus has shifted to the passage of a new fiscal package, which is expected to widen the deficit despite incorporating the revenue from tariffs which has become an important funder of proposed tax cuts. The US Treasury market has stabilised in recent weeks after turbulence in early April following the initial tariff announcement, and most government and corporate bond markets recorded positive performance in June. The Global Aggregate gained +0.3% in GBP terms, and our Fixed Income holdings rose by around +1%; our Alternatives allocation also made a valuable contribution, appreciating by around +2% in steady fashion.

We have not made changes to our asset allocation as we may start to see weakness on account of July’s corporate reporting season and the negative impact of trade barriers, despite a much more positive market environment in recent weeks.
